

Alice sits on the riverbank with her sister on a warm afternoon, growing drowsy, when a White Rabbit runs past. The rabbit wears a waistcoat, checks a pocket watch, and mutters that it is late. Alice follows it across the field and down a large rabbit-hole under a hedge.

Falling slowly down the rabbit-hole, Alice passes shelves lined with cupboards, bookshelves, and maps hung on pegs. She takes a jar labeled ORANGE MARMALADE from one shelf as she falls, finds it empty, and puts it back on another shelf so as not to hurt anyone standing below.

At the bottom, Alice finds a tiny locked door behind a curtain, far too small to fit through, and a golden key on a three-legged glass table. On the table she finds a bottle labeled DRINK ME; after checking it isn't marked poison, she drinks it and shrinks small enough to use the key.

Now too large again after eating a cake labeled EAT ME, Alice cries a pool of tears so large it floods the hall. She shrinks once more, falls into her own pool of tears, and meets a Mouse swimming nearby, to whom she awkwardly tries to make conversation about her cat Dinah.

Soaked from the pool of tears, Alice and a gathering of animals -- including a Dodo, a Duck, a Lory, and an Eaglet -- hold a Caucus-race, running in a circle with no clear start or finish, so that everyone can be declared a winner and dry off in the process.

The White Rabbit mistakes Alice for his housemaid and sends her to fetch his gloves and fan from his house. Inside, Alice drinks from an unlabeled bottle and grows enormous, becoming stuck with an arm out the window and a foot up the chimney, much to the Rabbit's alarm.

Alice meets a blue Caterpillar sitting on a large mushroom, smoking a hookah. It asks her, slowly and repeatedly, 'Who are you?' The Caterpillar tells her that eating one side of the mushroom will make her grow larger, and the other side will make her shrink.

In the woods, Alice encounters the Cheshire Cat grinning from the branch of a tree. The Cat tells her that everyone in Wonderland is mad, including itself and Alice, since she must be mad to have come there at all, and it has a habit of vanishing until only its grin remains.

Alice joins a Mad Tea-Party hosted by the Mad Hatter and the March Hare, with a Dormouse asleep between them. The Hatter asks Alice the riddle 'Why is a raven like a writing-desk?' without any real answer in mind, and the table keeps shifting seats whenever a place gets used up.

At the Queen of Hearts' croquet ground, players use live flamingos as mallets and curled-up hedgehogs as balls, while the arches are soldiers bent over on hands and feet. The Queen is short-tempered and frequently shouts 'Off with her head!' at nearly everyone she meets.
